

>> Horse transport should not strain horses more than absolutely necessary...

A lot can be achieved by practising, e.g. loading procedures and gentle ways of driving. Leg and tail wraps are effective means of protection. Dust exposure cannot be avoided but bronchial tubes are effectively protected by eQuantum-Pulmo. Have a look at the latest field report: Florian Hörmann is a vet and single horse driver and stated the following:

“...on the one hand, I’m a vet, on the other also a coachman. I have several horses for coaching sport class s international and participate in several tournaments all over Europe. One of my horses is extremely good, unfortunately has a restrictive lung function, though. I’ve tried all kinds of homeopathic treatments and blown a lot of money. Your product seems to be a welcome chance of improvement.”

“On the one hand, I’m on my way to take part in the World Championship after next with this horse and would love to continue training, on the other hand, this can only be done by achieving an improved lung function.”

>> We sent some free samples of eQuantum-Pulmo for testing <<

“...after nearly 2 weeks of feeding I could already notice some improvements, especially after relocating to Sweden. transporting my horse in a trailer truck means exposing it to an increased amount of dust resulting in constant coughing for several days after transportation. This coughing period, though, was reduced to only half a day after feeding eQuantum-Pulmo. The horse also seems to regenerate much more quickly after endurance performances.”

The vet concerned has now become a member of our eQuantum team and will in future feed his horses according to our plans with eQuantum-Basic, -Sport and –Pulmo and report accordingly.
